Connexions Resource Centre Index

The Connexions Resource Centre Index was designed with young people and practitioners, to help file, store and easily retrieve information on a variety of subjects. The index is separated into two sections:

General Information – this section is broken down into 11 headings.

Health

Housing

Law, your Rights and Citizenship

Money

Relationships

Where to get help

Work and Training

The Work and Training section has lots of information on different jobs. The occupational information is broken down into 23 main job families. Each one is represented by a different icon and heading and used to store information relating to jobs in that particular sector.

How to find Information

In both sections information is filed alphabetically, which is in line with what young people requested. The index is designed to be simple and straightforward.

In the Work and Training section, job titles have been included in the job family that best represents the occupational sector it falls under. For example;

If you were looking for information on how to become a Journalist, then you could think about what journalists do, and as they mainly work in newspapers and television etc. this job title can be located under:

Media, Print and Publishing

Some jobs can be found in many business sectors e.g. Project Manager. As most jobs of this nature would be based in an office environment then this job title is filed under:

Administration, Business and Office work

Some careers will not be as obvious. Where there is not a specific sector for the job you may be interested in, you should think about what the training route should be. For example;

If you would like to know more about becoming a Debt counsellor the training would concentrate more on counselling rather than the financial side. Although there is a Financial Services job family, you would locate this title under:

Social Work and Counselling Services

Civil Service, Armed Forces and Local Government

These sectors employ people in many different roles, for example: solicitors, scientists, administrative officers and engineers. Information on such general job titles will be located in their own job family, such as:

Solicitor in Legal and Political Services, and;

Engineer in Engineering

Jobs that are specific to Local Government can be found in Administration, Business and Office Work and specific to the Armed Forces can be found in Security and Armed Forces. Non professional jobs in the Civil Service are recruited at three levels. These can also be found in Administration, Business and Office Work.

The rest of this booklet contains the complete index and examples of where to find related job information.
